ance run in the sixth on a single by Bradley that scored Michael Algieri, who had walked.

GNAC selects St. Joe's AD as top executive

St. Joseph's athletic director Brian Curtin has been named the 2016 Great Northeast Athletic Conference Executive of the Year, the league office announced Tuesday morning.

The leader of the St. Joe's athletics department since May 2006, Curtin currently serves as the chair of the GNAC Executive Committee, working with GNAC Commissioner Joe Walsh.

During the 2015-16 academic year, Curtin also worked closely with St. Joseph's President Dr. James Dlugos — the chair of the GNAC Presidents' Council — to review and restructure the conference's bylaws. Under Curtin's guidance, a working group was formed to evaluate certain conference procedures and configuration.

In the classroom at St. Joseph's, the Monks increased their number of GNAC Academic All-Conference honorees (89) for the fourth consecutive year. On the field, nine of SJC's 10 record-bearing teams advanced to the GNAC Tournament, with the Monks women's basketball program capturing its second conference championship in three years. The department's baseball and field hockey programs made GNAC title-game appearances last year, while its staff also hosted the 2015 GNAC men's and women's cross country championships.

Several other strong track and field countries, particularly endurance powerhouse Kenya, will be on duty in Rio on the back of a huge number of doping positives and with their anti-doping controls routinely criticized as inadequate.

And as if dealing with the daily wave of doping discussions was not enough of a challenge for the IAAF and IOC, another controversy will raise its head again in Rio if, as expected, South Africa's Caster Semenya lives up to her tag as probably the hottest favorite on the track in the women's 800 meters.

Since her teenage triumph in the 2009 world championships, Semenya has had a troubled time. She was initially withdrawn from competition while she underwent gender tests and scientists argued over whether she should be allowed to compete because of an inflated testosterone level.

She is now back running impressive times but still at the center of debate about her eligibility.

In the men's 800 meters David Rudisha is battling for his best form and if he were to retain the title it would be a hugely popular triumph for the Kenyan.

IAAF President Seb Coe said he thought Rudisha's world record victory was the highlight of the 2012 Games and the Briton, former 800 world record holder and twice Olympic 1,500 champion, would dearly love his focus in Rio to be on such uplifting performances.

That, however, is highly unlikely to be the case.

The men's marathon will bring the athletics program to a close on Aug. 21 but that will almost certainly not be the final curtain.

If previous championships are anything to go by, retrospective doping disqualifications from the throwing events will start almost immediately while further doping offenses could be drip fed to an already totally disillusioned public up to and beyond 2024.

The question for track and field is will anyone be around then to notice? (Editing by Toby Davis) from less prestigious college programs.

It has worked out well for Mathis, a 62, 245-pound outside backer who played at Alabama A&M and was a fifth-round pick by the Colts in 2003. He turned 35 in February.

"He was undersized, came from a smaller school, and I came from that same upbringing," Bates told Colts.com. "I try to take all that in and really try to emulate his game and see what I can use that he does that works."

Bates has been paying great attention to how Mathis (118 career sacks, 51 forced fumbles, 15 fumble recoveries) has molded his skills to fit the Colts' scheme and the NFL game.

He has been challenged thus far in camp, especially trying to cover veteran receivers such as T.Y. Hilton or taking on blocks by hulking offensive linemen.

But Bates' efforts have not been lost on Indy's all-time sacks leader.

"Very smart and instinctive player," Mathis said of Bates. "He's kind of one of my favorite rookies right now, so I'm a big fan. He does what he needs to do to get better each and every day."

NFL teams have made the transition this week to practicing in full pads. Bates hopes to pass his first significant test on Sunday when the Colts take on the Green Bay Packers in the Pro Football Hall of Fame Game at Canton, Ohio.

He may even encounter a familiar face on the other side of the line of scrimmage. Former UMaine teammate Justin Perillo is a third-year tight end for the Packers.

"I'm really just taking it one day at a time," Bates told The Herald Bulletin. "But when that time comes to play that game and strap it up and actually be able to hit, get the violence back into the game, it's going to be great."

Mariners rally by Red Sox in eighth

THE SPORTS XCHANGE

SEATTLE — Robinson Cano's three-run, eighth-inning home run completed Seattle's comeback from a four-run deficit as the Mariners rallied to beat the Boston Red Sox 5-4 Tuesday night.

With one out, Cano hit a 1-2 pitch from new Boston reliever Fernando Abad into the right field seats.

Red Sox starter David Price dominated the Mariners for seven scoreless innings before losing his grip in the eighth. He gave up four consecutive hits to open the inning before the Red Sox turned to their bullpen.

Four of Seattle's five runs in the eighth were charged to Price, who allowed seven hits over seven-plus innings and did not factor into the decision.

Abad, who was acquired in a deadline trade with the Minnesota Twins on Sunday, made his Red Sox debut and gave up a three-run homer to the first batter he faced. Abad (1-5) was added to the roster after Monday night's win.

Mike Zunino led off the eighth with a home run, pulling Seattle (53-52) within 4-1. Guillermo Heredia added an RBI single, his first major league hit, as Boston's lead shrunk to 4-2 before Cano's 24th home run of the season completed the comeback.

Mariners rookie reliever Edwin Diaz, promoted to the closer's job after veteran Steve Cishek struggled in back-to-back games Sunday and Monday, made the most of his first opportunity. He struck out three of the four batters he faced in a scoreless ninth to earn his first career save.

Donn Roach (2-0) earned the win after giving up one run on one hit in two innings.

Mariners starter Wade LeBlanc allowed three runs on five hits over six innings and left the game with Seattle trailing 3-0.

Boston veteran David Ortiz went 1-for-3 with two RBIs. He gave the Red Sox a 1-0 lead with an RBI double in the first inning and added a sacrifice fly in the eighth, putting Boston ahead 4-0.

Hanley Ramirez had two hits for the Red Sox (58-47). Boston prospect Andrew Benintendi made his major league debut as a pinch hitter and wound up going 0-for-2. He struck out on a 99 mph Diaz fastball to end the game.

Ramirez's 14th home run of the season helped the Red Sox build a 3-0 lead in the fourth inning. Ramirez crushed a 1-1 pitch from LeBlanc 454 feet into the stands in left-center field for a solo shot. Aaron Hill added an RBI single in the two-run fourth.

just get the most out of that rep," he added.

Bates is listed second on the Colts' depth chart at strong-side linebacker behind Erik Walden, a ninth-year player out of Middle Tennessee State.

Bates is in the midst of a considerable transition as he attempts to make the jump to playing on Sundays.

For starters, he spent almost his entire career at the University of Maine playing defensive end. That meant developing a knack for shedding opposing linemen and tracking down the quarterback or the ballcarrier.

Bates did so successfully, claiming All-Colonial Athletic Association first-team honors after posting 57 tackles, including 7 1/2 sacks. He was third in the conference with 14 1/2 tackles for a loss of yardage.

In going from playing with his hand on the ground to standing up and having different responsibilities, Bates is trying to focus on doing all the little things that will add up to success at linebacker.

"I'm a little undersized, so I've got to really hone in on using my discipline and using discipline with my technique and playing with great leverage and playing behind my hands and taking that with every single rep," Bates told Colts.com's Andrew Walker on Monday.

The unassuming Bates has earned his NFL opportunity through hard work and persistence, so he is willing to do whatever it takes to modify his play if it will help him get on the field.

With Indianapolis, Bates also has the luxury of learning the ropes from Mathis. He and the 14-year NFL veteran share some common background, as both are smaller players who came the sea, instead of on artificial waves, likely in the Prefecture of Chiba. Skateboarding, with two street and two park events involving 40 competitors each (20 male, 20 female), will be in Tokyo.

"This is a game-changing moment for surfing," said international federation president Fernando Aguerre.

"We are already seeing increased popularity of the sport across the world and the Olympic Games will provide an incredible platform to further showcase surfing."

Karate could use the Nippon budokan — home of Japanese martial arts — and will have two events (one men's and one women's) for kata and three weight classes for kumite.

Sports climbing, also in urban Tokyo, will feature men's and women's competitions for bouldering, lead and speed combined with a total of 474 athletes to compete in the five sports.

Venues are to be finalized by the end of the year, Mori said.
