'Billions' and 'The Big Short' question wealth and virtue

BY ALYSSA ROSENBERG THE WASHINGTON POST

With income inequality dominating the race for the Democratic presidential nomination and billionaire Donald Trump touting his fortune as evidence of his virtue on the stump in the Republican race, America is awash in difficult conversations about money.

And in this environment, I've found myself returning to Adam McKay's Oscar-nominated film about the financial crisis, "The Big Short," and Showtime's slickly engaging new series about the clash between a hedge-fund billionaire and a U.S. attorney, "Billions."

What "Billions" and "The Big Short" have in common is the idea that very large amounts of money are, in and of themselves, morally neutral But those piles can be applied in ways that are either moral or immoral, virtuous or self-

Part of what makes "Billions" genuinely intriguing is that it doesn't make the easy mistake of suggesting that hedge-fund superstar Bobby Axelrod ("Homeland" veteran Damian Lewis) is either good or bad simply because he's rich. Instead, the show is interested in how he uses money.

In one episode, Axelrod decides he wants his name on a university building. But because the naming rights have already been assigned, the school tells him he'll have to

What "Billions" and "The Big Short" have in common is the idea that very large amounts of money are, in and of themselves, morally neutral. But those piles can be applied in ways that are either moral or immoral, virtuous or selfish talk to the original donors. Axelrod learns that the family is in deep debt and offers them what is effectively a buyout. And then the show turns what might have been an indulgence of Axelrod's ego, the sight of a very wealthy man dropping a jaw-dropping, but to him inconsequential, amount of money on a whim, into something more complicated.

The patriarch of the family Axelrod is dealing with once got the younger man fired from his job caddying years ago. The family, of course, has no idea that their carelessness might ever have cost someone something that they really needed. As the deal is supposed to go down, Axelrod reveals that history and says he'll pay the family less than what he promised, knowing their financial desperation will compel them to go through with it anyway. The story turns out to be about vengeance rather than vanity, new money punishing old wealth for sloth and a lack of consideration.

"Billions" was renewed for a second season shortly into its run and will probably keep riding its moral teeter-totter all the way until the show's conclusion, whenever that day might come. But in slightly more than two hours, "The Big Short" comes to a more despairing conclusion.

The film follows a group of investors who come to believe that a housing bubble is about to burst, bringing down with it bonds created from big packages built from mortgages. But what initially seems like the deal of a lifetime comes to see like a terrible moral compro-

"You just bet against the American economy," Ben Rickert (Brad Pitt), a former trader who is helping two young investors with their short, tells them when they begin to celebrate their vision. 'If we're right, it means people lose homes, jobs, retirement savings, pensions. These aren't just numbers. For every point unemployment goes up, 40,000 people die. Did you know

And Ben is less of an activist than Mark Baum (Steve Cast members Brad Pitt and Ryan Gosling at the premiere of "The Big Short" in New York in 2015.

Carell), who comes to believe the moral ambitions of the that his shorts are a way to punish people who are both stupid and greedy. But right at the moment when his bet is about to pay out, it becomes clear that government bailouts will prevent the kind of catastrophic agony Baum wanted to cause.

"The whole time we were wondering how the big banks could be so stupid. ... They didn't care. They knew the taxpayers had to bail 'em out," Baum laments. "I bet in a few years we'll be doing what people always do when the economy goes south: blaming immigrants and poor people."

Money, in "The Big Short," is more powerful than the men who wield it. And no matter people who know how to manipulate it, the drive to profit is more powerful than even the smartest bets.

"Making money is not like I thought it would be," Mike Burry (Christian Bale), an eccentric but prescient hedgefund manager, writes in a letter closing down his fund toward the end of "The Big Short." "This business kills the part of life that is essential: the part that has nothing to do with business.

That's not a revelation that Bobby Axelrod will be reaching anytime soon. But wherever you land on the question of wealth and morality, the queasiness of both "Billions' and "The Big Short" feels essential and unsettling.

SHOW

Hall & Oates heading to Bangor

BY EMILY BURNHAM BDN STAFF

Waterfront Concerts announced Tuesday morning that multiplatinum duo Hall & Oates will perform at the Darling's Waterfront Pavilion on Thursday, July 14, with special guests Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings and Trombone Shorty. Tickets for this show will go on sale via Ticketmaster or at Mark's Music in Brewer at 10 a.m. Friday, Feb. 12. For more information, visit waterfrontconcerts.com.

Hall & Oates have countless top 10 or No. 1 hits, including "Private Eves." "I Can't Go For Girl," "Sara Smile" and many more. In 2014, Daryl and John were inducted into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame. Daryl Hall and John Oates are in 2016 very much at the height of their powers making their own kind of soul, with a new generation of musicians recognizing not only their historic track record of success but also their continuing influence and achievements. Hall & Oates last performed in Bangor in October 1984 at the Bangor Auditorium for the kickoff for their Big Bang Boom tour.

Joining Hall & Oates will be Sharon Jones & the Dap-Kings.

"Kiss on My List," "Rich singer Sharon Jones, who was plucked from obscurity in the mid-2000s after decades spent working a regular job and singing on the side. The Dap-Kings are one of the finest funk/soul bands in the world, playing a revivalist sound indebted to the classic soul era of the 1960s and 70s. In 2013, Jones was treated for and recovered from a cancer diagnosis; she went on to receive a Grammy nomination for the band's 2014 album, "Give the People What They Want."

> Trombone Shorty is a funk, soul and rhythm and blues artist from New Orleans, who last performed in Bangor in 2013
