The Frontier Sugarworks sugarhouse is located just miles from the border with Quebec. Carrie Braman and VJ Guarino have signed a 20-year lease with the state of Maine for the rights to the 200-acre, state-owned sugarbush on the border.

kins, a maple products specialist with the University of Maine Cooperative Extension, told the BDN in 2014.

According to Whitcomb, it takes a long-range plan to encourage the maple industry. That's one reason the long sugarbush leases make sense.

"I don't think maple is anything but growth," the commissioner said this week. "The key is the trees. Grow it, harvest it and sell it — that's the common theme for any natural resource."

Prior to Braman and Guarino leasing the 200-acre sugarbush from the state, the land had been selectively logged to leave the maple trees behind. When they started working the parcel, they had no sugarhouse to process the sap, but spent the first few years selling their sap to other processors.

That changed when they obtained a $100,000 loan through Coastal Enterprises Inc. to build a sugarhouse and buy key equipment such as an evaporator.

"For three years now, we've been selling syrup," Braman said. "It's going really well, although we're not over the scary financial hump just yet."

As of now, miles of plastic tubing brings clear sap from 5,000 taps to their new sugarhouse. They love the wildlife they see on the land — with a and moose can bite holes in the tubes.

"And what will often happen is a moose will come running through and knock over the tubing," Braman said.

So the farmers have to keep checking on the tubes, making sure they are in good working order. And as is the case with all farmers, Braman and Guarino need nature to cooperate in order to have a good harvest. Last winter, with its recordbreaking cold temperatures and many feet of snow, didn't provide the best conditions for maple syrup. When spring came, it came fast, Braman said, and the suddenly warm temperatures put a halt to the harvest. Last spring, they made 21 barrels, or about 1,155 gallons of certified organic syrup.

This spring, with its freezes and thaws, already seems more promising. They started boiling on March 8, more than a month earlier than they did in 2015, but the sap has not stopped flowing yet.

"We've been doing really well this year, which is a huge relief," Braman said. 'We're hoping to make 40 barrels. Our big joke is that we're going to go to Las Vegas if we make 40. Neither of us wants to go to Las Vegas. But we're still hoping the season will extend to the end of April."

During the sap season, Guarino doesn't leave the sugarbush.

"He's got a maple baby," few caveats. Squirrels, bears Braman said. "He's got to check all the equipment every three hours.

But she does leave from time to time. They own a straw-bale house in Northport, about three hours from Sandy Bay Township, and so have been cultivating ties with stores and customers along the state's more heavily populated coast. Frontier Sugarworks syrup is available at farmer's markets in Camden and Northeast Harbor, at the Belfast Co-op, the Portland Co-op, the Good Tern Co-op in Rockland and Dot's in Lincolnville, among other locales. Braman also is trying to diversify their product line and makes maple sugar, maple candy, maple-glazed nuts and more. "We're busy," Braman said.

That's for sure, according to Whitcomb, the commissioner. "Frontier is a wonderful example. They've worked awfully hard running those lines and getting their boiling operations together," he said. "It's an immense amount of work. People think of making maple syrup as a two week or three week harvest, but it's months of work in preparation, and then three weeks or five weeks of intensity."

Braman said that she enjoys the work.

"I love boiling so much. The smell, the taste," she said. "And it's a fun way to bring in the spring, to be outdoors the whole time."

The workshop is designed Ronda Stone, Maine Departfor those interested in inhome food processing for resale. Topics covered will include licensing requirements, food safety and liability insurance. Panel ment of Agriculture, Conservation and Forestry. Cheryl Wixson, MOFGA's resident chef, will serve as

Building low-cost milking parlors

 ${\tt HINCKLEY-Designing}$ and building low-cost, efficient milking parlors for dairy herds is the focus of a free workshop 10 a.m.-2 p.m. Thursday, April 14, at Kennebec Valley Community College Alfond Campus, Recreation Center, Route 201.

Larry Tranel, dairy specialist with Iowa State University Cooperative Extension, will discuss TRANS-Iowa parlors, designed to be ly and improve milking speed and cow movement. University of Maine Cooperative Extension, Maine Organic Milk Producers and Coastal Enterprises Inc. are sponsoring the workshop.

The cost of milking cows in Maine is higher than many areas of the nation, according to UMaine Extension professor Rick Kersbergen in a press release. The cost translates to lower profit margins and productivity. One reason for the high cost is the amount of time associated with milking in ineffily, many Maine farmers suffer debilitating physical ailments due to poorly designed systems and barns.

The workshop, which will be held in conjunction with MOMP's annual meeting, is free to all Maine dairy farmers and includes lunch. Preregistration is requested and available online (extension.umaine.edu/register/ product/designing-buildingmilking-parlors).

For information or to request a disability accommodation, contact Kersbergen at 207-342-5971 or richard.
