warm clothing. Yes, I'll bring my trusty smartphone, but, no, I won't rely on it to save my life. And maybe it's time to reconsider the merits of hiking with a friend.

Hiking alone means making every decision by myself. It means having no one to leave at the last toppled cairn or faded paint blaze while I go looking for the next one. It means only one set of eyes and ears, one knowledge base, one skill set and one sense of mordant humor when the going gets tough.

Especially as I get older, a trail buddy could easily make the difference between a good decision and a bad one, between being lost and being found again. This is what I have learned from poor, lost Geraldine Largay and the tragedy of her lonesome death in the Maine woods.
