Nest

“The nest isn’t so empty,” she said with a laugh, explaining that her home is a bit of a revolving door for her kids, who come and go.

Despite the fact that her nest at home is full, she decided to open up the shop. She hasn’t given up her full-time job yet because she wants to ensure the success of her small business, but as I stood in the shop and talked with her, a half-dozen shoppers came through, along with a flower delivery and an artisan with a bag full of goods.

Each of them was greeted with a friendly “Welcome to The Nest!”

Because Melinda is still working, she gets help from her mother, Winni Murray, and her sisters, Mia Applebee and Melissa Lowe. Each of them contributes something to the shop as well, including upcycled items from Winni and Mia and a line of organic teas and other products from Melissa’s business, Living Pretty.

All throughout the shop are unique items from Maine artisans, from handmade candy and sweets from Dandy Candy in Bangor, soaps from Maude’s Milk Soaps in Surry, pottery from Good Land Pottery in Montville, fabric items from Chicks and Quarters Farm in Holden, hand painted and stenciled wood signs from Belle & Summer Co. in Bangor and handcrafted jewelry from Tree-To-Sky Studio on Parks Pond — there are products from nearly 50 Maine vendors in the shop.

There’s a section dedicated to products for your furry friends — the shop is dog-friendly — and another section for children. There are books, Maine-made wines and candles, furniture and homemade jams, macrame plant holders and driftwood art. Whatever you’re looking for, the shop probably will have it. For Melinda, a Bangor resident who grew up in Brewer, owning a shop that supports locals is important. She loves to shop small and did this as much for others as she did for herself.

“I wanted to support the community and state,” she said.

From Wednesday, June 15, to Sunday, June 19, Melinda and her family are holding a grand-opening week, complete with a sidewalk sale, food samples and a table full of drawings to enter, which the vendors contributed to.

The shop is open 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., Wednesday through Sunday. I was pleasantly surprised by the other offerings surrounding The Nest’s location in the Fairmount neighborhood on Hammond Street as well.

Across the street is Charlotte Lorraine’s, a clothing consignment boutique. Nearby is Second Chances, an antique shop, along with the Whoopie Pie Cafe and a bunch of other places to shop. If you’re looking for an afternoon out, you could shop for gifts, antiques and clothes, then grab some lunch and dessert — all without having to move your car from its parking space.

As for me, I found a few things for my dad for his birthday and Father’s Day. I won’t give it all away because I know he’ll be reading this, but he can expect a sweet treat, a card with a portrait of one of his favorite animals and another handmade creation that has a coastal theme.

Melinda’s shop is always stocking new things and looking for new vendors. She’s expecting a delivery of wine from Cellardoor Winery in Lincolnville and handcrafted clocks from a Maine clockmaker.

If you want to support small business and local artisans, The Not So Empty Nest may just have just what you’re looking for.

actual March 18, 1990, theft of 13 works from the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in Boston, a crime that has never been solved. It is a case that has riveted the writer since it happened.

“I saw a presentation about the Gardner Museum and the heist and was immediately fascinated. Somebody stole something they can never sell,” he said. “I really got into it. I bought books on art, famous artworks that had been stolen.”

One of the missing works is Rembrandt’s 1633 painting, “Storm on the Sea of Galilee.”

“That particular painting, I see as just absolutely astonishing,” Corrigan said. “Just the brilliance of that, and the thought that it’s somewhere — things just came together in terms of that type of book.”

The more he thought about the theft and work done to solve the crime, the more fascinated he became.

“The reason you would steal [something like] that, typically, is if you know you will be charged with a crime in the future. This is the card people have played, typically people in organized crime, ‘I know where one of them is,’ and of course people want to make the trade.”

The Ukrainian boy who appears at the novel’s beginning is Aleksei Vann. Vann is in the U.S. because of actions by his father, who was “put in a position where life’s circumstances have him making a really bad choice,” the writer explained.

The home base is Garrett, a small Aroostook County town near the Canadian border, in which the heroine endeavors to keep her life in balance. For Corrigan, Cote herself is the highlight of all the books.

“The fact that she’s a single mom and she’s always struggling with home versus her work life — that balance is very real,” he said.

“Even as a writer, I’m more interested with Peyton Cote’s personal life and growth as a character than I am the crime aspects of these books. It’s Peyton Cote’s home life that sort of keeps me going — and the setting.”

That setting is close to Corrigan’s heart.

“I grew up in Readfield and then got hired by MSSM, so I was there for seven years and then at NMCC for three years. We lived in Presque Isle for seven or eight years of that decade, and that’s still home for me — just great, great memories. I fell totally in love with the place.

“When I started writing the series, I had moved, and it was almost out of homesickness that the setting came about,” he added. “Being able to convey some of those images and, hopefully, authenticity was for me more than the readers, trying to pick images that speak to the reader and show the unique setting.”

Several Aroostook County folk have even contributed to his writing. In the book’s acknowledgements, Corrigan thanks Maine State Trooper Adam Stoutamyer for his assistance with state drug laws.

“Adam is a dear friend and has often, for probably more than a decade, offered technical insight — including last night by email — about things like ballistics and procedure,” Corrigan said. “He’s always been open with his time. And, again, I consider him a close friend, and I’m lucky to have him be willing to share his insights.”

He also mentioned former U.S. Border Patrol Deputy Chief Kevin Stevens. “That’s an interesting connection, because his sister worked at NMCC with me,” Corrigan recalled. “So to be able to have the man who once ran the entire Border Patrol answering questions about specifics ... that’s a huge asset. Without people like Adam and Kevin for me to be able to research and ask questions, you couldn’t do Border Patrol in places like The County.”

He emphasized he writes about the area because he loves it.

“The first book was dedicated to the people of The County,” he said. “That’s one of the things I hope, is that especially people up there see that I’m trying to honor the region, the culture and the way of life. I respect and admire the area and the people, and I hope that comes out in all these books.”

School has just ended for Corrigan, but in between summer school he will also be working on book four in the Peyton Cote series.

“Contemporary readers of crime fiction demand all the elements of literary fiction, but they also demand that you keep them on the edge of their seats,” he concluded.

Which is exactly where he wants readers to be.
