Chicken coop giveaway thrills two Maine kids

MONSON — For the last week, it seems as though 5-year-old Kendall Killam of Monson has spent all her time at her new favorite place: sitting in a little camp chair that's parked right next to the chicken coop she won through the Maine Poultry Connection.

"She's been living out there, pretty much," her mom, Nicole Killam, said of Kendall. "Even last night, when it was pouring rain, she had to be out there. She goes out multiple, multiple times a day. She's in her camp chair out there right now."

That's because Kendall's new coop came with six chickens, which she has been feeding, watering and watching carefully. She won the coop, the six pullets, a year's supply of grain and more chicken-related gear after writing a short essay explaining why she wanted chickens and how she would care for them. Kendall and

James Davis, 6, of Farmington Falls were the two winners of the statewide chicken coop giveaway. Scott DeMoranville, the founder of the Maine Poultry Connection, said that last weekend's coop deliveries were a rousing success.

"If you could have seen the looks of those kids' faces," he said. "I was giggly right along with them. It was fantastic. Everybody was thrilled about the whole thing."

Six-year-old Kendall Killam (right) of Monson stands inside her new chicken coop with her little brother, Kyle Killam. Kendall won the coop and six chickens in a statewide coop giveaway organized by the Maine Poultry Connection resource group.

Members of the poultry resource group raised more than $4,000 last winter through an online auction to make the coop giveaway happen.

Amanda Davis, James' mom, said her son grinned from ear to ear when he found out he won. So far, he has named three of the pullets: Chickadee, Sadie and Wilder.

"He puts them in the coop every night. He's been feeding them and making sure they have water," Amanda Davis said. "He's patiently waiting for them to lay their eggs. That's the part he's looking forward to the most."

DeMoranville said he's hoping the Maine Poultry Connection will be able to do a coop giveaway every spring.

"It's just an all-around good thing," he said.

Nicole Killam said her daughter puts on her Muck boots every morning and heads outside to check on her flock. Kendall — whose favorite chicken is a white silkie she has named Fluffy — has even bigger dreams now, her mom said.

"We have a big vegetable garden out back and a big flower garden. Now Kendall thinks we need a farm," Nicole Killam said. "Next on her list is pigs and a horse."

Barn doors to swing wide for Open Farm Day July 24

BY KATHLEEN PIERCE
BDN STAFF

When meeting your farmer isn't enough, be your own farmer — if only for a day. No, really, you can on July 24 at Open Farm Day.

This year, more than 80 farms across Maine, featuring everything from emus to wineries, will participate in the event, where the public is invited behind gates and barn doors to experience what life is like on the farm. It's free.

Open Farm Day celebrates the art of agriculture.

"It is a great opportunity for farmers to teach people, provide educational experience and share skills like cheese making [and] gardening and you learn about what's growing in the state," said Samantha Howard, agricultural promotions coordinator for the Maine Department of Agriculture Conservation and Forestry, who runs the event. "It's a chance to connect with farmers."

Now in its 27th year, Open Farm Day is more popular than ever.

"In Maine the numbers of farms have been increasing, while in the rest of country the numbers have been declining," said Howard.

Today Maine boasts 8,000 farms, said Howard, and "new people are getting into farming every year. We want to encourage that across the board."

The state's diverse farm scene, from fiber artists to vegetable farmers to goats, dairy, wine and cheese makers, will all be on display on July 24. You can learn how to milk a cow at Smiling Hill Farm in Westbrook or how goat milk soap is made in Dexter. Weave next to a fiber artist and pick a few flowers on a lily farm. Many farms will have samples of the products they make, so come hungry and curious.

"As people become more interested in where their food is coming from, the local food movement is growing in the state," said Howard. "It's an educational opportunity geared towards families and communities interested in agriculture."
