Christiana Becker holds up several wood block prints depicting stories of her Penobscot Nation heritage.

Artist

Becker begins each print by preparing a piece of soft Shina wood, which she first seals before carving her images into it. Once her design is complete, she applies ink to the wood and presses paper onto it. Each color on a print requires its own carved woodblock, she said.

"This has become my favorite medium for my art," Becker said. "Through the prints, I can put my own artistic interpretation to the [Penobscot] stories, but I also try to remain true to the legends."

She also wants to remain true to her Penobscot culture and bring attention to outside forces impacting it.

The Maine Center for Disease Control and Prevention's safe eating guidelines recommends consuming no more than one to two fish meals per month of fish taken from the Penobscot River because of unsafe levels of PCBs, dioxin and other chemicals.

"The [Penobscot] River is part of my family," she said. "But with the current [polluted] situation in the river, I know there are members of my community who can no longer use the river for sustenance or use it for ceremonies that a part of our culture."

Becker wants to do more research into the health of the river in addition to statistics document missing and murdered indigenous women to use her art to effectively highlight those issues.

She also wants to incorporate more traditional Penobscot materials into her printmaking, such as porcupine quills and deer hides.

For now, she'll finish up her undergraduate work at UMaine this coming year and graduate with degrees in studio art, teacher education and the necessary coursework to pursue a graduate degree in occupational therapy.

Becker has not yet sold any of her pieces, but they have been shown at galleries around the state and in the university's Wyeth Center. Her piece "First Mother/First Corn" is on display in the campus' Memorial Union third floor.

Stan Lee unveils comic-book franchise 'Nitron'

REUTERS

On the eve of Comic-Con, iconic creator Stan Lee unveiled "Nitron" as a new comic-book character franchise aimed at feature films, TV and digital platforms.

Lee, the creator of such characters as Spider-Man, the Incredible Hulk, X-Men, the Avengers and Iron Man, is partnering with Keya Morgan and Michael Benaroya on "Nitron," which revolves around a highly intelligent and advanced species of Nitronians who covertly live on modern day Earth.

The comic-book will serve as the source material for film, TV and digital adaptations produced by Benaroya Pictures. The company said last week it has secured an initial $50 million fund to finance the development and production with Benaroya as an anchor investor.

Benaroya, Lee and Morgan are writing the content and will be producers. Benaroya Publishing will release the comic-books in January as a six-volume series with subsequent issues to come out on a monthly basis.

"It's a pleasure to partner with Michael Benaroya and Keya Morgan on 'Nitron,'" Lee said. "I am excited for everyone to explore the amazing world of 'Nitron' with us."

Lee is the former president and chairman of Marvel Comics. In 2001, he founded POW! Entertainment, which formed Stan Lee Global Entertainment in 2014 as a joint venture with a Hong Kong-based investor.

Benaroya's credits include "Cell," "Cymbeline," "Queen of the Desert," "Kill Your Darlings" and "Margin Call."
