A certified personal trainer and yoga instructor, Marr said older adults, especially those who are new to working out, should consult with a professional as they get started. A personal trainer can help identify target goals, assess strengths and weaknesses and work with medical conditions such as high blood pressure or orthopedic problems, she said.

Your exercise program should be safe and effective. It should build slowly. You'll hear people saying we should 'feel the burn' or 'feel the pain' — that's not great advice at any age, but you can't tell a 20-year-old that," she said.

In addition to private gyms such as Age Right Fitness adult exercise classes can be found at most YMCA YWCA facilities, through local area agency on aging and through many community adult education programs. Many malls in Maine open early on winter mornings for public indoor walking. Other resources include online or television classes.
