BRUCE W. HAZELTON

NORTH YARMOUTH - Bruce W. Hazelton (87) passed away peacefully on September 10, 2015. He was born on November 2, 1927 in Chester, NH to Robert C. and Margaret (McComb) Hazelton. He graduated from Phillips Exeter Academy in Exeter, NH, Class of 1946. Following high school, he attended Amos Tuck School of Business at Dartmouth College - Class of 1950.

Bruce joined his father selling and servicing Ford tractors in the business his father established at the family farm in Chester during the Depression. R. C. Hazelton Co., Inc., later expanded to a larger facility in Manchester, NH, selling and servicing International Harvester construction equipment.

In June of 1950, he married Avalon Lee Crosby of Derry, NH. When the business expanded to Maine in 1956, Bruce and his young family moved to Cumberland Foreside and later to North Yarmouth. Bruce served as general manager of the Cumberland operations as well as President of R. C. Hazelton Co, Inc until his retirement in 1984.

Bruce's passion was stamp collecting and U.S. Postal History, especially as it related to the state of Maine. Over his lifetime he amassed one of the largest collections of Maine Postal History in the country and was well known and highly respected for his extensive knowledge and vast collection. He was often invited to speak to various philatelic groups around the country.

Bruce's love of stamps and Maine history led him to serve and support numerous philatelic and historical societies around the country, including Portland, Waterville, Ellsworth, York County, Great Bay Stamp Clubs, Maine Philatelic Society, Boston Philatelic Group, American Philatelic Society, as well as Cumberland, North Yarmouth, Yarmouth and Maine Historical Societies, and Skyline Farm Carriage Museum.

Bruce's other great love was golf. He had been known to play with fluorescent orange golf balls in the snow. For many years he organized the Senior Men's and Women's Golf Leagues at Val Halla, Freeport and Toddy Brook Golf Courses.

Bruce was predeceased by his parents, his wife of 54 years and his eldest daughter, The Reverend Gweneth L. Hazelton. He is survived by his son, Robert C. Hazelton of North Yarmouth; daughters Janet Stoddard and husband Craig of North Yarmouth and Lily Bay and Lisa Trainor and husband John of Derry, NH. He leaves his grandsons, Jacob Stoddard and wife Ashley of Raymond, ME; and Sean Trainor of Derry, NH; granddaughters Shannon, Kelly and Erin Trainor, all of Derry, NH, and Linan Cicerchia and husband Stephen of Warwick, RI and their sons Thomas and Noah.

Bruce is also survived by his brother Richard and wife Marion of Chester, NH; nieces Catharine Plummer and husband Kitt of Londonderry, NH and Deborah Lewis of Chester, NH; nephews Daniel Hazelton and wife Lorna of Chester; David Folsom of Farmington, NH and Neal Folsom and wife Verna of Epping, NH.

A Celebration Of Life is planned for Sunday, September 20th at 2pm at the North Yarmouth Congregational Church, 3 Gray Road, North Yarmouth, ME with a Masonic Memorial Service to be held following. Those attending are encouraged to wear something yellow, Bruce's favorite color. A reception following the service will be held at Cole Farms, 64 Lewiston Road, Gray, ME. There will be no interment, as Bruce donated his body to the University of New England for medical research purposes.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to Hospice of Southern Maine in memory of Bruce. Gifts may be mailed to HSM, 180 US Route 1, Scarborough, ME 04074, or online at www.hospiceofsouthernmaine.org/give.

Gaylord Shaw, journalist who won Pulitzer in 1978, dies

BY TIMOTHY M. PHELPS
TRIBUNE WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — Gaylord Shaw, a renowned journalist who broke the news of President Richard Nixon's resignation and won the Pulitzer Prize for national reporting in 1978 for the Los Angeles Times, has died at age 73.

Shaw died Sept. 6 in Duncan, Oklahoma, after a two-decade battle with multiple sclerosis, his family said Wednesday.

Shaw was a major force in journalism, as an investigative reporter with an uncommon gift for writing and as an editor with a deft hand and a gentle disposition, for over three decades. He practiced his craft in Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado and Washington, D.C.

"He had all the virtues that real reporters are supposed to have," former Los Angeles Times bureau chief Doyle McManus said. "And there was a little bit of Will Rogers in Gaylord, because

Einar Ingman Jr., Korean War veteran and Medal of Honor recipient, dies at 85

BY MATT SCHUDEL
THE WASHINGTON POST

Shot in the face during a battle in the Korean War, Einar Ingman kept on fighting. When he ran out of bullets, he used his bayonet. Near death from his wounds, he managed to take out two machine-gun nests before losing consciousness on the battlefield.

Months later, Ingman left a hospital bed to attend a White House ceremony in 1951, when he was awarded the Medal of Honor for his "indomitable courage."

Ingman was 85, and one of fewer than 10 surviving Medal of Honor recipients from the Korean War, when he died Sept. 9 at a hospital in Tomahawk, Wisconsin. He had been in declining health since suffering a cerebral hemorrhage in 2003, said a daughter, Mary Ingman.

He joined the Army when he was 19, hoping to work with heavy machinery. After war broke out in Korea in 1950, Ingman took up a rifle as a member of the 7th Infantry Division.

He was a 21-year-old corporal who already had been wounded once in combat before the encounter that led to the Medal of Honor, the nation's highest award for wartime valor.

On Feb. 26, 1951, he was part of a platoon leading an advance on a ridge held by Chinese forces near the Korean town of Maltari. His unit faced heavy machine-gun fire, which wounded two squad leaders and several other soldiers.

Ingman took charge and radioed for tank and artillery support. He combined the fragmented forces of two squads and organized an assault, firing his rifle as he charged up the hill.

After throwing a grenade into one machine-gun nest, he used his rifle to mow down the remaining enemy soldiers. He then turned toward a second machine-gun emplacement about 15 yards away.

A grenade exploded near his head, taking off part of his left ear and knocking him to the ground. As he rose to his feet, he was shot in the face, just below his nose. The bullet exited his skull behind his left ear.

Ingman had no recollection of what happened afterward; the description of the action came from his fellow soldiers.

Despite being blinded in his left eye and losing many of his upper teeth, Ingman continued his assault as blood poured from his wounds. He fired his rifle until his ammunition was depleted, then used his bayonet at close quarters, killing the entire Chinese machine-gun crew.

"As a result of the singular action by Cpl. Ingman," his Medal of Honor citation read, "the defense of the enemy was broken, his squad secured its objective, and more than 100 hostile troops abandoned their weapons and fled in disorganized retreat."

Ingman collapsed at the scene. Rescued by helicopter, he regained consciousness seven days later at a hospital in Tokyo.

Over the next two years, he underwent 23 operations. In addition to losing his left eye, Ingman sustained a serious brain injury and would remain deaf in his left ear. His Medal of Honor citation praised him for his "indomitable courage, extraordinary heroism, and superb leadership."

Einar Harold Ingman Jr. was born Oct. 6, 1929, in Milwaukee and grew up on a farm near Tomahawk.

After he received the Medal of Honor, thousands of people turned out for a parade to welcome him back to his rural home town, where he was presented with a new car and a boat.

Discharged from the Army as a sergeant in 1952, Ingman spent 32 years working for a paper company in Tomahawk, first as a security guard and later as a mail clerk.

He attended many ceremonies for veterans and Medal of Honor recipients, including 11 presidential inaugurations, and visited Korea several times over the years. In 2014, two of his children traveled to Seoul to receive South Korea's highest military decoration on his behalf.

His wife of 58 years, the former Mardelle Goodfellow, died in 2011. Survivors include seven children; a sister; two brothers; eight grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

Ingman was one of four soldiers to receive the Medal of Honor at a White House ceremony July 5, 1951. As President Harry S. Truman placed the sky-blue ribbon of the Medal of Honor around the neck of each soldier, he quietly said, "I'd rather have this medal than be president."
