Rosa Parks' archive online at Library of Congress

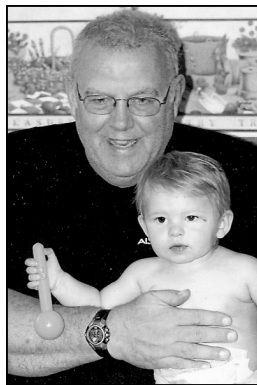

BY MICHAEL E. RUANE
THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — The Library of Congress announced past week that it has digitized and posted online its huge collection of papers and photographs related to the legendary civil rights figure Rosa Parks.

The collection contains 7,500 manuscripts and 2,500 photographs related to Parks, who made headlines on Dec. 1, 1955, when she refused to give up her seat to a white passenger on a segregated bus in Montgomery, Alabama.

What followed was the historic 380-day African American boycott of Montgomery buses, a U.S. Supreme Court decision desegregating the city's public transportation, and the civil rights movement.

Parks died in Detroit in 2005 at 92.

‘Banker to the Stars’ Bram Goldsmith dies

BY STEPHEN MILLER
BLOOMBERG

Bram Goldsmith, Hollywood's "Banker to the Stars" who expanded City National Bank's assets more than fivefold during two decades at its helm, has died. He was 93.

He died Feb. 28 of natural causes at his home in Beverly Hills, California, according to the Los Angeles-based lender.

Goldsmith served as chairman and chief executive officer of City National Bank from 1975 to 1995, expanding its assets to $3.2 billion from $600 million. He continued to serve as chairman of its former parent, City National Corp., until 2013. Royal Bank of Canada acquired the company in 2015.

"My father was a remarkable man, truly one of a kind," City National Bank CEO Russell Goldsmith said Monday in a statement. "Among other things, he established the high standards, reputation, values and value proposition that continue to define City National today."

City National Bank has a history of supporting the entertainment industry, funding about 50 movies a year, according to a 2012 Los Angeles Times story. In 1963, Frank Sinatra borrowed money to pay ransom to his son's kidnappers. The bank also loaned Arnold Schwarzenegger $4.5 million to help fund his first California gubernatorial race in 2003.

Other clients included Hollywood VIPs Kirk Douglas and Steven Spielberg, and celebrity chef Wolfgang

Puck. A Newsweek profile in 1985 called Goldsmith the "Banker to the Stars."

Bram Goldsmith was born Feb. 22, 1923, in Chicago to Max and Bertha Goldsmith. He attended the University of Illinois, where he studied finance and business administration. In 1942, he joined the U.S. Army and served in Burma.

Goldsmith moved to Southern California in 1952 and founded Buckeye Realty and Management Corp., which built homes in the suburbs of Los Angeles. Later, he constructed office buildings along Wilshire Boulevard and the City National Bank building in downtown Los Angeles.

His father-in-law, Ben Maltz, was among the original investors in City National Bank, which opened its doors in 1954. He replaced Maltz on the board a decade later.

From 1981 to 1987, Goldsmith served as a board member of the Los Angeles branch of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco.

He was a lifetime trustee of the United Jewish Appeal, Cedars-Sinai Medical Center and the Los Angeles Philharmonic Association. He also led the effort to renovate the landmark 1933 Beverly Hills post office, now the site of the Wallis Annenberg Center for the Performing Arts, including the 500-seat Bram Goldsmith Theater.

Goldsmith lived in Beverly Hills with his wife of more than 70 years, Elaine, a sculptress. They had two sons, and five grandchildren.
