Recurrent TIAs cause for great concern

Dear Dr. Roach: I have a 69-year-old woman friend who has been having TIAs for over a year. She averages one a week. Doctors are puzzled.

Jumbles: WIPER

They last 15 to 20 minutes, with drooling and numbness on the left side. I am very worried about what is going to happen.

Is this normal for an older person? Aren't TIAs a prelude to a major stroke? What do you think should be done? - Anon.

A transient ischemic attack is a temporary loss of function of the nervous system. It is similar to a stroke, but a stroke causes permanent damage to cells of the nervous system. (In a stroke, symptoms may improve despite permanent damage, and this is due to the nervous system's ability to find new ways to perform the functions of dam-

However, TIAs are worrisome also because they predict a higher likelihood of developing a stroke, which can range from minor damage to catastrophic loss of brain function and death.

TIAs and strokes unfortunately are all too common, but I would never characterize them as normal.

A TIA should be looked at as an emergency: One colleague of mine said it's "chest pain of the brain," and people with TIAs should be rapidly evaluated.

Abnormal heart rhythm, such as atrial fibrillation, can be a cause for TIA.

I don't know how extensive the evaluation of your friend has been thus far.

If she already has had an extensive workup done, it is reasonable to consider some less-common possibilities. Sometimes seizures can appear clinically similar to TIAs, as can multiple sclerosis and other related condi-

Dear Dr. Roach: I'm 85 years old, and my doctor wants me to go for another bone scan. I'm reluctant to go through with the test. At my age, I don't think medication will do me any good. I take calcium and vitamin D. — E.C.

I do understand when patients tell me that they don't want to undergo unnecessary tests and procedures due to their age, but some tests make more sense than others.

The reason I would recommend that you follow your doctor's advice in this case is that the test itself is simple and not dangerous, and because it's fairly likely that at age 85, you may have osteoporosis. If your friend would like, If you do have osteoporosis, perhaps you could accompany there is effective treatment her to her next visit, so you (both medication and not), South should take a diamond finesse can get a better idea of how even at age 85, that will reduce thorough her medical team your likelihood of a fracture. continue hearts, South wins the third I have seen fractures lead to times.

Sound technique

Intelligence is like underwear: You need it, but there is no reason to show it off. You don't have to make spectacular plays to be regarded as a good player. Consistently good technique will do.

At 3NT South won the first heart with the king; if he ducked the first trick, the defenders might shift to spades. South then led a club, and East rose with his ace to return a heart. Declarer played low, won the next heart, led a club to dummy and let the eight of diamonds ride, but West took the king and cashed two hearts. Down one.

UNSOUND

South's technique was unsound. at Trick Two When West wins to heart and forces out the ace of clubs. long-term suffering too many He wins East's spade return, runs the clubs and leads another diamond, making an overtrick.

South must hope West has only one Scrabble Solution entry. South's play would have worked if that entry had been the ace of clubs. The correct play wins if West has either diamond honor.

DAILY QUESTION

You hold: ♠ Q 9 8 5 2 ♥ Q 9 8 ♦ Q 5 ♣ A 8 4. Your partner opens one heart. The next player passes.

What do you say?
ANSWER: If you judge the hand too strong for a raise to two hearts, respond one spade. If partner rebids two hearts, raise to three. If he bids two of a minor suit, jump to three hearts, invitational. I would respond one spade with A 9 8 5 2, Q 9 8, 5 2, A 8 4. With the actual hand, I wouldn't like the side queens and might settle for a timid single raise.
