Seborrheic dermatitis a common issue

Dear Dr. Roach: I would DR. KEITH ROACH appreciate any advice on dealing with seborrheic dermatitis. I have scratched areas until I bleed. I was told to use Selsun Blue shampoo and hydrocortisone cream, which help. Is this caused by sebaceous glands in skin? — S.L.

Seborrheic dermatitis is a very common problem, but what causes it is incompletely understood. The most current theory is that it is due to a reaction to a fungus on the skin, Malassezia, which colonizes the skin in people with seborrheic dermatitis. The fungi grow in areas with lots of sebaceous glands, which secrete oils to moisturize the skin. The most common locations are on the face. It can appear on the trunk, where it can be confused with other skin conditions. Most people come to the doctor because of the appearance; itching is be worth a trial of tar shamcian, such as a dermatologist, usually can make the diagnosis just by looking at it, but a skin biopsy is occasionally necessary.

Because your body seems to be reacting to the yeast, you were prescribed Selsun Blue, which contains selenium. It reduces the body's inflammatory response. Steroids, the most gentle of which is hydrocortisone, also reduce inflammation on the skin. Tar shampoos (such as T-gel) also have anti-inflammatory properties and are more effective in some people. Sometimes, physicians recommend treatment with an antifungal shampoo to reduce the amount of yeast.

Since it seems you have had steroid and selenium, it might dispersal," I would imagine to fairly common. A skilled clinipoo or antifungal shampoo. Administration. — J.P.

Dear Dr. Roach: I am a 78year-old retired airline pilot recently diagnosed with midstage ALS. I'm exhibiting all the classic symptoms. There are no treatment options other than Rilutek, which gives only an additional six months at most, with some serious side effects. I have been reading about a very promising drug called GM 604. Can you possibly expand on this drug? They claim it has arrested progression in 7 out of 8 trial subjects. I know it's a rare disease, but Hawking, for one. The comget around the Food and Drug

I did read through the results of the GM 604 trials, and although the evidence is preliminary, the drug appears to be safe. The study results and case reports show significant improvement. The results are far from definitive, however.

Given that there are no other good options (Rilutek is quite limited, as you say), I certainly would recommend you try the drug, either as part of a study or through the drug company if it becomes available for compassionate use. Unfortunately, I can't find a way at the current time for people with ALS in the U.S. to get the medication.

usually quickly (Dr. Hawking only partial response to the pany claims "compassionate has a rare, slowly progressing form), I urge evaluation as rapidly as possible to hopefully get this drug available.

"I take it he let you down on defense again," I sighed.

Wendy and Cy the Cynic were today's East-West.

'Čy led the jack of hearts against four spades," Wendy told me: "king, ace, four. I knew South had the queen of diamonds for his bid of 3NT. His pattern was probably 4-2-3-4

"So I led a low diamond," Wendy went on. "South won in dummy and The FDA needs to balance let the nine of trumps ride. The Cynic risks and benefits of every took the king and did something the outcome is fatal except in potential new medication, but right, for once. He led his last a few isolated cases—Stephen since ALS is uniformly fatal, diamond, and I won and gave him a ruff for down one."

"Why are you upset?" I frowned. "You defended well.

"All by myself," Wendy growled. "Defense is supposed to be a Scrabble Solution partnership effort. If Cy just leads the ten of diamonds — the unbid suit at Trick One, we beat the contract with less effort on my part.'

"She's a hard woman to please," Cy told me.

ANSWER: You must act since your partner is marked with some values. If he had none, the opponents would have bid more. Double. You wouldn't double an opening bid of one club if you were in the direct position, but actions in the balancing position may be shaded. Double with good shape and as few as 10 highcard points.
